A new attack upon the Administration's Panama policy was determined at a meeting in Senator Gorman's conference room at the Capitol. This was Mr. Stope's maiden speech in the Senate, and he was listened to attentively by a large number of his colleagues, especially Gorman, Culberson, Bacon, and McCreary, of the minority leaders. Mr. Stone attempted to attack the whole policy of the Administration. He read most of his speech from manu-script, occasionally adding comments.

Continuing in this strain, he said never again could the Republicans preach against secession or wave the bloody shirt against treason. The secession of Panama was treason, he declared, and would never have been attempted by the people of Panama "without some assurances of extraneous support."

The Missouri Senator paid his compliments to Bunau-Varilla without the least mineing of words. He referred to him as "that voluble and seemingly ablquitous Frenchman," and gave him other such epithets.
